

Prayer and Praises

Holly Meath's Monthly Newsletter • February 2014

Dear Friends,

It is easy for me to forget the power and necessity of prayer. Many times this past summer, I was struck by how often I would ask boldly for something and actually receive it. I want to discover the joy and impact of prayer again and to remain persistent in that discipline. I also recognize that I have been very blessed these past months to get to do this work at all, and I want to maintain a spirit of thanksgiving for the experiences and opportunities I've been given.

As my support team, please join me in lifting up these paired praises and requests to God as I head into the final months of my internship.

Thanksgiving

1. I have a group of great folks who are faithfully caring for the unborn by financially supporting my work.
2. I have the privilege of being a vessel through which God speaks to and cares for people.
3. Several of my co-workers have recently experienced hearing back that they have helped to either save a life or bring someone to God.
4. I have good and exciting life changes coming up after my internship as I plan to move back east and get married this summer.
5. I get to be steeped in the outstandingly joyful and caring JFA community for another few months.

Requests

1. Bless my support team. Please help me work diligently to raise the rest of my support and not forget my dependence on God's provision.
2. I ask that people I have talked to would continue to process and experience more interactions that would keep them thinking, whether that be through reconnecting with me or through other influences. I ask this especially for Aiden (pictured) and my old friend "Jen" (name changed for privacy).
3. Please bless me with the experience of learning that I have helped to save a life or to lead someone to God. My hope is that I would not desire this for selfish reasons, but rather so that I could use such a story to encourage others when I am no longer surrounded by JFA people on whose experiences I can draw.
4. Please help me to focus on today's work and not be distracted by the future.
5. Bless JFA's travel and outreach efforts this spring.

Blessings,
