

Morgan

When I'm doing this work, it is easy to forget why I'm doing it. I spend so much of my time planning events, training people, and doing outreach, that I think a lot about those things. I think about the people I've met. I think about the people I've spoken to during outreach.

It's easy to think about things other than the children who are the reason for my work. Every so often, though, I stop and consider the fact that approximately 862,320* children will be killed this year in America by abortion. In fact, abortion takes more lives than cancer, guns, heart disease, car accidents, or drunk driving. It's the single largest cause of death in this country.

Rather than be discouraged, I suggest we keep our focus on what we can do. Because of your help, I can train others to have conversations about abortion. I can create outreach opportunities where minds are changed. These things will not save 862,320 lives next year. But I pray that they will save some. And maybe one day in the future, actions like these will help change our culture enough to save them all.

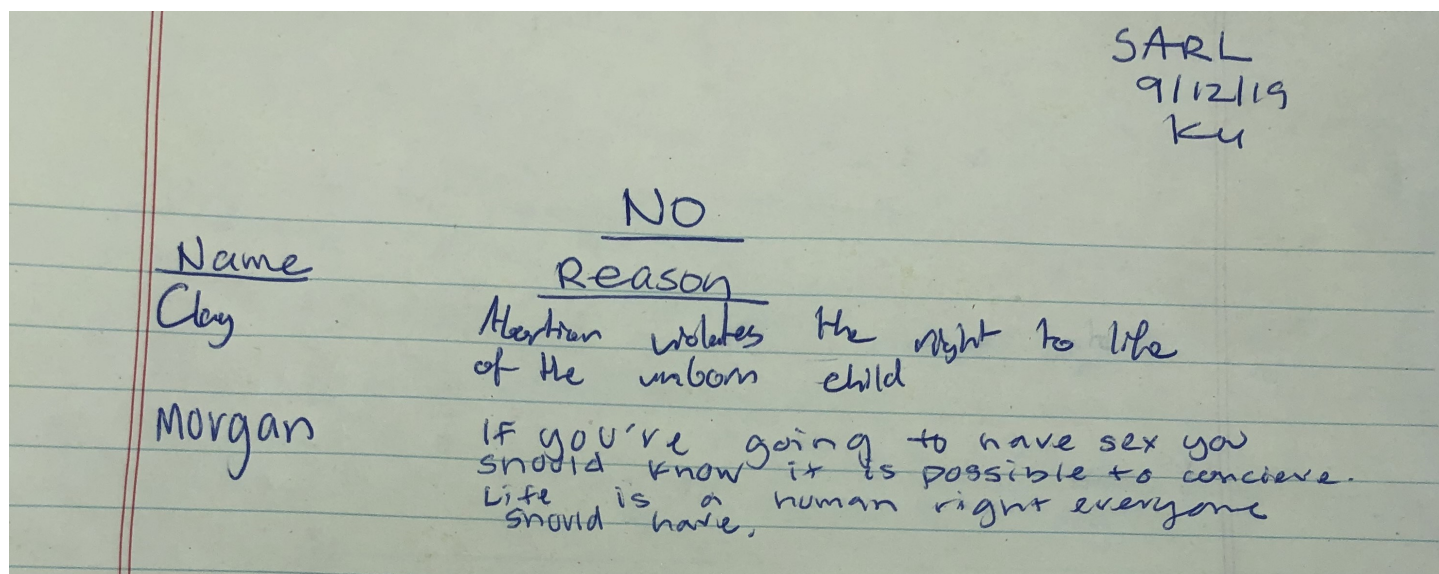

I believe the solution to abortion is conversations like the one I had with Morgan at the University of Kansas this fall. As a Christian, she had once heard a woman who had survived an abortion speak at her church. Still, Morgan was pro-choice because she didn't want to tell other people what they should do, and consequently, she thought abortion should be legal.

I decided it might help to share with her some basic facts. She was surprised to learn that the unborn are undeniably human, just as human as we are. I then told her how many abortions take place each year: 862,320. She was shocked. She asked me to repeat the number because she had no idea there were so many. I showed her our brochure, and after being warned, she purposefully flipped right to the page showing pictures of children after abortion. Again, she was shocked. At the end of our conversation, she said, "You've changed my mind" and went over to sign "No," at our "Should Abortion Remain Legal?" poll table. (Her comments are shown below.)

Could Morgan someday save a life from abortion? Absolutely. Every day that I do this work, it becomes more clear to me that changing the number of abortions from 862,320 to zero will involve conversations exactly like the one I had with Morgan that day.

On the back of this newsletter, you can see all of the places Justice For All has been in the fall. These events are all focused on the thing that will one day end abortion: training thousands to make abortion unthinkable for millions, one person at a time.
