Tammy Cook's Justice For All Monthly Update

April 2016

Dear Friend,

It is very common during an election season to hear people talk about what the law should be for abortion. It's also very common to hear some version of the following sentiment in those discussions:

"I'm pro-life, but I can't tell other people what to do. Therefore, abortion should be legal."

JFA trainer Rebecca Haschke did a beautiful job of helping one young man think through this sentiment. She describes their conversation in her letter entitled "#Mindblown" (enclosed). In his case, because he had religious reasons for his point of view on abortion, he felt that he was disqualified from making a case that abortion should not be legal.

I think you'll be encouraged to see how this young man came to see things differently in just minutes. In the process, you'll witness Rebecca's manner, and you'll learn a sequence of questions you can ask when you are confronted with this sort of concern in conversations with friends and neighbors.

Blessings in Christ,

Exciting News!

The team at Justice For All has used one large exhibit (and various smaller versions with the same or similar content) to conduct outreach for more than 250 days on more than 40 campuses over the past 15 years. To kick off a new era of research and development, we raised two new large exhibits during three days of outreach at Colorado State University last week. We'll raise both large exhibits again at UCLA on May 23 and 25. We'll have more to say about our exhibit research and development in a future letter. For now, please pray for our upcoming outreach at UCLA. Keep an eye on our various social media pages (www.jfaweb.org/blog, www.facebook.com/trainthousands) for pictures that we'll post sometime soon.
