

Elementary Education and Tea Parties

Updates and Prayer Requests

TIMOTHY BRAHM'S MONTHLY UPDATE

NOVEMBER 1, 2013

Dear Friend,

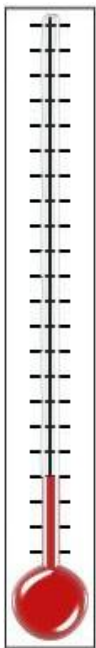

Between writing projects and training events, I've neglected to share about an exciting project on which I've been working. It's JFA's Elementary Education Project. It is a curriculum for teaching elementary school children about life in the womb in a fun and memorable way. Our hope is that if children see what an unborn child looks like and learn a little about her development, it will make an impact on the children when they're older, particularly when they or someone they know is considering abortion. My colleague Catherine Wurts and I are hard at work on the prototyping phase of the project, and we're hoping to start teaching this material to students in elementary classrooms in Kansas and Oklahoma by the end of this year. Please pray for wisdom as we develop the curriculum and for opportunities for us to teach it.

On a more personal note, I am incredibly excited about a new Monday night discussion group I have started. It's modeled after a group in Georgia I attended for years (and still attend whenever I get the opportunity) called "English Tea Room" (though some of us still refer to it by its original name "Tea Party," which we changed when the conservative political movement stole it from us). The heart of the English Tea Room in Georgia is to encourage a clash of ideas, while maintaining a safe environment for people to share their views. Please pray for God's blessing on this group, that it would be helpful and encouraging to anyone who comes, and that the conversation would be glorifying to God.

So that I can continue to do my work with Justice For All, I set a goal of raising five hundred dollars in monthly commitments by the end of this year. Please pray for God to bless my fundraising efforts. If you know anyone that you think would be excited about my work, I would love to meet them!

Finally, I would appreciate your prayers as I seek a church home in Wichita.

Thank you so much for your prayers, encouragement, and support.

I talked with Brianna, a student at Oklahoma State University, for about fifteen minutes. She was such a staunch advocate for choice that she thought parents should have the legal right to kill their ten-year-olds for any reason. Please keep Brianna in your prayers, as well as students like her who defend abortion at all costs.

My blog (www.timothybrahm.com) is off to an excellent start. My upcoming entry is An Open Letter to Churches Regarding Homosexuality. It will first be posted at evangelicaloutpost.com.
