

Laura Does Repeat Work

2010 Intern Has a Model Conversation

STEPHEN WAGNER'S MONTHLY UPDATE

July 1, 2011

Dear Friend,

It's the "Holy Grail" of pro-life trainers: Repeat Work.

What is "Repeat Work"? Simply put, can we succeed in helping pro-life advocates feel comfortable enough to take initiative to start dialogue on abortion with people in everyday life? We've found that participating first in our mentor-guided seminars (seat work) and outreach events really helps. Then, we confidently challenge students after the outreach to talk to just one person in their own sphere of influence, using one of JFA's dialogue tools to help get things started.

Laura Beeson took that challenge seriously. She interned with JFA in the summer of 2010 and then went to nursing school in the fall. In class one day, she started a conversation about abortion in a very natural way. She sent her recollection of the dialogue to my colleague Tammy Cook, and I am passing it along to you (below). It's the second in JFA's series called "The Conversation."

During her conversation, Laura gave her friend a short tour of the Justice For All Exhibit brochure. If you'd like to use the same tour to start a conversation, please contact me. I'd love to help.

Thanks for helping me train competent, winsome pro-life advocates like Laura. Your support means so much to them and to me.

In Christ,
Stephen

P.S. You'll notice that Laura mentions Samuel Armas, who was diagnosed with spina bifida in the womb. In my newsletter last month, I commented that in more than 50% of cases of prenatal diagnosis of spina bifida, the parents elect to kill the child through abortion. I went back to the studies to check my work and make sure the evidence bears this out. In my June 23 blog post, I analyzed the available studies and corrected my statement to say that while we do know some are killed following spina bifida prenatal diagnosis, we don't have very good evidence to say definitively what the percentage is.

Series

JUSTICE
FOR ALL

Note: "The Conversation" is a series of articles from Justice For All, an organization that trains thousands to make abortion unthinkable for millions, one person at a time. Each article in the series allows you to learn from a JFA mentor or volunteer the skills of good dialogue on abortion by looking in on one of their conversations. In this article, an anecdote from Laura Beeson (a 2010 JFA Intern) models how to start a conversation in real life and make it productive by finding common ground and giving a tour of the first few pages of the JFA Exhibit Brochure – what JFA calls "Repeat Work." – Stephen Wagner, Director of Training

Repeat Work in Science Class

Stephen Wagner & Laura Beeson, JFA Mentors

JFA Mentor Laura Beeson is currently a nursing student in New Mexico. Recently, she relayed a conversation to us that took place in the fall of 2010 in her Anatomy class.

Laura: We were talking about abortion in my biomedical ethics class.

Friend: Yeah? You know, I'm pro-choice, but only in the very early stages.

Laura: I used to be like that, too, actually. I'd stick up for the right to an abortion to my cousin when we'd discuss it. Until I saw a picture. I actually have pictures with me. Do you mind if I share them with you?

Friend: Sure.

Laura: Well, [the JFA Exhibit Brochure] doesn't start with abortion, it just starts with biology. Like when does life begin? Or is this a human? What do you think?

Friend: This is interesting.

Laura: Well, the next picture isn't of an abortion. It's a picture of a surgery being performed on a little guy named Sammy. He had spina bifida, so the doctors went in and performed a 35,000 dollar surgery on him while he was 21 weeks old to fuse his spine. Now he's actually a competitive swimmer!

Friend: Oh my gosh. That is so cute. But 21 weeks?! What kind of sick person would abort then?

Laura: Well, this is how we treat wanted children, right? We give them surgeries to fix and help them, but unwanted children... they get a whole different type of surgery. This is abortion. So I'd like to ask, does our wantedness or unwantedness define our value as human beings?

Friend: Oh my gosh, you can see their intestines!

Laura: I know. I don't think the majority of people know what this looks like.

Friend: How could anyone do this!?

She [the young woman from my class] approached me the following Wednesday and said,

Friend: Laura, I cannot stop thinking about those pictures. I was always pro-choice. But, I never put a face to the word! I even told my mom about it! I just can't believe that happens. I held someone's hand during an abortion when I was young. I had nooooo idea what was going on. Why don't more people know!?"

I looked down at my Exhibit Brochure and thought, "This is one powerful tool."

Notice how this conversation seems very natural. Laura didn't have to force the discussion of the difficult topic of abortion. She knew that most people want to think and talk about the issue, that few ever experience good dialogue on abortion, and that she had a recent experience related to abortion. Laura had also been trained over the last three years as both a volunteer and intern with Justice For All. She experienced our seminar ("Seat Work") and outreaches ("Feet Work") multiple times. Because of these things, Laura had the courage to bring up the topic with a friend. We call this "Repeat Work."

Laura was on the lookout for an opportunity to bring up the topic of abortion. ("We were talking about abortion in my biomedical ethics class"). Then she was on the lookout for specific aspects of common ground in what her friend was saying. ("I used to be like that, too, actually.") She also had the JFA Exhibit Brochure in her bag, ready for any opportunity that might arise throughout the day. Finally, she was courteous with the graphic pictures in the exhibit. She asked for her friend's permission even before she opened to the first page of the brochure.

The JFA Exhibit Brochure is a museum-quality, nine-by-four-inch version of the Justice For All Exhibit. It's a simple conversational tool that includes images of the unborn and abortion. She didn't give it to her friend with no explanation, assuming that an impersonal set of words and pictures would be effective on its own. Instead, Laura walked her friend through the first four pages, summarizing the panels in two main questions ("Is this a human?" and "Does our wantedness or unwantedness define our value as human beings?"). Those questions helped Laura and her friend keep focused on the most important aspects of the abortion issue.

This conversation wasn't grueling or nerve-wracking. Laura knew how to start the conversation, how to ask the right kinds of questions, and how to show pictures of abortion in a way that was helpful. What strikes me also about the conversation is that it's so "everyday." It's a small moment in which a friend's few words and gracious, no-pressure approach helped a young woman change her mind.
